Message from the Minister and Deputy Minister

I am pleased to present the 2004-2005 business plan for Intergovernmental Affairs. This plan outlines the mission, strategic objectives, and priorities of the agency for the coming year.

The Office of Intergovernmental Affairs (IGA) is the central coordinating agency for the Executive Council in the field of intergovernmental affairs. It is responsible for coordinating the Province's relations with other governments, and for promoting understanding of our provincial operations and opportunities in the broader national and international context.

The Office works to coordinate and facilitate line departments' relations with each other and other governments on long term and strategic issues. Our primary role is to ensure that the Province's approach in its relations with other governments is consistent, and to ensure a corporate perspective in all departmental dealings in national and international arenas.

There are five key areas where federal-provincial interaction over the coming year will hold particular importance for the future social and economic development of Nova Scotia. These areas include the improvement of the health care system, negotiations on offshore benefits to ensure Nova Scotia is the principal beneficiary, climate change, urban issues, and trade policy.

Intergovernmental Affairs will also continue to take a lead role in regional cooperation, both in Atlantic Canada and with New England, trade negotiations, and First Ministers' and Premiers' meetings. With respect to Premiers' meetings, the newly formed Council of the Federation provides opportunities for Nova Scotia to make our concerns better known to the rest of Canada, to form alliances with other provinces and territories to advance shared concerns to Ottawa, and to cooperate in the delivery of services to Canadians.

Mission

To provide leadership in the development of corporate strategies for Nova Scotia's relations with other governments.

Planning Context

Intergovernmental Affairs (IGA) is the central coordinating agency for the Executive Council in the field of intergovernmental affairs. It is responsible for coordinating and pursuing the Province's relations with the Federal government, other Provinces and Territories, and foreign governments at the national and subnational levels.

The fact that the Government of Nova Scotia receives 35 percent of its revenue from Federal sources is reason enough to pay attention to intergovernmental relations. With recent events, the need for a coordinated Nova Scotian approach to intergovernmental relations has never been greater. There is a new administration in Ottawa, and Federal budget surpluses remain strong, but transfers to the Provinces for health care and for Equalization remain inadequate and unresponsive to different patterns of needs across the country. While the new Federal administration states that it seeks a better relationship with the Provinces and Territories, some of its policy statements will require clarification, as in the areas of cities, trade policy and the environment, to ensure that a Federal-Provincial partnership can be based on mutual respect for each level of government's constitutional jurisdiction. And so far, Ottawa's response to Nova Scotia's requests for full implementation of Federal legislation regarding offshore petroleum benefits has been slow.

Thus, over the coming year, there will be five key areas where federal-provincial interaction will hold particular importance for the future social and economic development of Nova Scotia: health care, offshore benefits, action on climate change, urban issues and trade policy.

Within the Province, trends towards an increasingly elderly population, growing labour skill shortages, the migration of rural Nova Scotians to large urban centres, coupled with pressures on resource industry stocks and the constraints associated with carrying a heavy ($12.3 billion) debt burden are significant for our planning context. They have increased both the desirability of Federal/Provincial cooperation to provide economic stimulus and of renewed fiscal arrangements to address the increased social, health and public service needs in this Province.

These needs may in part be addressed through the Federal government's national programs for activities as diverse as building infrastructure, improving border security, fostering innovation, skills development, immigration and disaster relief, which are important to Nova Scotia. Here effective intergovernmental communication is required to ensure that Nova Scotia receives its fair share of whatever program funding is available.

Interprovincially, there are developing trends towards increased consultation and cooperation. From 1995 onwards, Annual Premiers' Conferences witnessed ever-greater solidarity between the Provinces and Territories in calling for changes to Federal policy and fiscal arrangements, particularly for health care, post-secondary education and transportation infrastructure. Premiers also agreed on the need to achieve higher levels of functional cooperation between the Provinces and Territories themselves. These trends came together in the Annual Premiers' Conference in Charlottetown during the summer of 2003, when Premiers agreed to establish a new organization called the Council of the Federation with its own secretariat, specifically to promote Provincial/Territorial policy positions and functional cooperation.

At its inaugural meeting in Vancouver on 23-24 February 2004, the Council of the Federation set out an ambitious workplan. Premiers will work with Health and Finance Ministers to address health care sustainability and reform, public health and wellness, and strengthening Equalization. Premiers will work with other Ministers to promote better relations with the United States, improve literacy levels, campaign in favour of Canadian beef, reduce internal trade barriers. They will propose new models, sensitive to Provincial-Territorial concerns, for selecting people to serve in key national institutions such as the Senate and the Supreme Court of Canada, and new mechanisms for involving the Provinces and Territories in international negotiations. Nova Scotia and Manitoba will be spearheading efforts to ensure more responsive and flexible financing arrangements in the case of emergencies. The workplan will be coordinated through intergovernmental affairs agencies across Canada, and consequently represents a significant accretion of new work for the Office.

These developments were foreshadowed by the establishment of the Council of Atlantic Premiers in 2000. Since then, the four Atlantic Provinces have adopted common regional positions for the improvement of fiscal arrangements and an Atlantic Action Plan for regional cooperation in areas ranging from health and post-secondary education to energy and resource development. The lessons learned at the regional level will be drawn upon for the national exercise. It is expected that the Council of Atlantic Premiers will be taking a prominent role in profiling the region, its strengths and concerns, to the Federal Government and the rest of Canada during 2004-05.

Finally, the events of 11 September 2001 have heightened the importance of the Province's international relations, particularly with the United States. US trade protectionism, as in the softwood lumber dispute, port security, cross-border transportation and security, and air access issues related to preclearance for Halifax International Airport are all on the intergovernmental agenda. In these circumstances, Nova Scotia's long-standing relationship with New England has become increasingly valuable. The New England Governors/Eastern Canadian Premiers' Conference has established an ambitious environmental and trade agenda, and is a major forum for promoting mutual understanding and cooperative action on cross-border issues. Intergovernmental Affairs is also dedicating more resources to monitoring developments at the Federal level in the United States, with a view to being able to take appropriate action if initiatives in Washington have the potential to affect Nova Scotia adversely. This will complement both the Council of the Federation's initiatives to improve Canada - United States relations and the Federal Government's Expanded Representation Initiative (ERI), which will expand the number of diplomatic posts in the United States.

Within this overall environment, Intergovernmental Affairs must, through its direct relations with the Federal Privy Council Office and the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade and with intergovernmental agencies in other Provinces and States, promote an intergovernmental negotiating climate that reduces causes of friction between jurisdictions so that constructive negotiations may occur.

Furthermore, coordination of Nova Scotia's intergovernmental relations is essential to ensure that consistent messages are relayed by Nova Scotian departments and agencies to our negotiating partners.

On the one hand, the increasing number of issues requiring intergovernmental cooperation to resolve has led line departments to create specialized Federal-Provincial or intergovernmental sections. The relationship of Intergovernmental Affairs to these sections resembles the relationship between Treasury and Policy Board and the various departmental policy sections throughout government. The line departments focus on their own specific and often technical issues, while the central agencies provide a government-wide perspective and corporate coordination.

On the other hand, more and more intergovernmental issues are horizontal in nature, that is, their solution requires input and action from more than one department. Frequently, too, the Federal Government considers that issues - such as climate change, the federal urban agenda, and the strategic framework on social union - transcend jurisdiction, and seeks a solution involving not only several departments, but also more than one order of government. Intergovernmental Affairs is then called upon to coordinate these "residual" or "orphan" files, which do not fall neatly into any single line department's area of responsibility. Furthermore, fiscal constraint in some line departments may require Intergovernmental Affairs to take a more active role in intergovernmental negotiations on technical issues, as it already does on the climate change file.

Intergovernmental Affairs (IGA) staff complement remains one of the smallest among IGA offices in Canada, and our resources will be stretched to fulfil their mandated analytical, intelligence-gathering, and negotiating objectives and additional responsibilities. These pressures can be resolved, however, through collaboration with line departments and agencies, clearer definition of intergovernmental roles and priorities, and a stress on effective information exchange and coordinated communications about intergovernmental matters by all departments and agencies.

Protocol Office

The Protocol Office, which became part of Intergovernmental Affairs in 2002, plays an important role in setting the scene for Nova Scotia's intergovernmental and international strategy. The Office manages the logistics for all official visits of diplomats and dignitaries, and promotes Nova Scotian businesses, artisans and culture through government-sponsored events, including dinners, conferences, award ceremonies and the government's gift bank

The Protocol Office also plays significant advisory and administrative roles within Nova Scotia. It provides protocol advice and assistance to the Lieutenant Governor, the Premier, members of the Executive Council, the Speaker and the public. It also administers the Order of Nova Scotia and the Premier's Congratulatory Certificate Program.

Strategic Goals

Outcome/Performance Measures

To assess the extent to which Nova Scotia's interests are being advanced in a consistent and effective manner in all of this Province's relations with other governments, Intergovernmental Affairs has developed the specific outcome measures listed at the back of this Business Plan. While the measures specifically relate to the core businesses of Intergovernmental Affairs, they also serve as qualitative or quantitative measures of performance within three broad outcome areas:

1. The development of an enhanced understanding and acceptance, in this government and among other governments, of Nova Scotia's priority interests and positions in intergovernmental matters;
2. Interdepartmental coordination to ensure a corporate, priority-based, approach to Federal-Provincial/ Territorial issues, especially where they cut across several departments' responsibilities;
3. Ensuring that intergovernmental negotiations are conducted according to the corporate priorities of the Government of Nova Scotia and on the basis of thorough knowledge of the issues involved and of the interests and positions of other governments.

It should be noted that it is not always possible to control the outcomes of activities which involve either negotiations or delivery by line departments. Nor is it possible to predetermine the performance measures for the many substantive national and international issues that will surface over the course of the year that have yet to come to our attention, and that tend to occupy so much of the IGA calendar. For these reasons many IGA activities are not directly quantifiable.

That said, IGA makes a concerted effort each year to review its performance by collecting feedback from the people in departments and agencies that it deals with, gauging performance and making continuous improvements to its operations. The performance review process is facilitated by the analysis of the IGA's annual Departmental/Agency Satisfaction Survey, and the key results are reported in the IGA's annual Business Plan. Also, IGA is in the process of developing improved performance measures. This reflects efforts each year to continuously improve our ability to understand our performance in context to the services we deliver and our planning efforts.

Performance Report, 2003-04

In order to complete the IGA's annual business planning cycle, the following comparative performance report has been prepared. The report is based on a satisfaction survey that was mailed in March 2004 to 134 Nova Scotia government employees that have had significant contact with the IGA Office over the fiscal year 2003-04. The results that are presented are based on the views of 61 respondents from 18 Provincial government departments and agencies and are considered to be representative of the audiences IGA serves and works with.

The results from the recent survey (see table below) measure how the IGA Office has performed relative to its five core goals for 2003-04. The results indicate that since the inception of the survey in 2001-02, IGA has made considerable progress in achieving its goals and on building relationships with the departments/agencies it interacts with. In all but one of the goal categories the targets for 2003-04 have been surpassed. Furthermore, the year-over-year results show a steady improvement since the base year measure (2001-02) in IGA's ability to successfully communicate key positions relative to intergovernmental issues; ensure that the principle of fairness plays an important role in intergovernmental negotiations and discussions; build regional alliances; and expand Nova Scotia's international linkages.

In regard to the measure indicating how satisfied department/agency staff were with IGA meeting the overall needs of their department/agency, a score of 72 percent satisfied, or more than satisfied, fell short of the target 80 percent. It also showed a decline from the score of 83 percent recorded in 2002-03. The change from the previous year can be explained in part by a technical factor:

- The introduction of a neutral response (i.e., neither satisfied or dissatisfied) to the range of possible responses in the 2003-04 survey was intended to improve the quality of the survey. However, in this instance the change has likely diluted IGA's score. In 2002-03 respondents had the choice to either be satisfied (or better) or dissatisfied (or worse), but not to have a neutral opinion. This omission likely created a positive bias in some of the results, but was corrected in 2003-04. If the 2003-04 survey respondents who identified that they were neither satisfied or dissatisfied were added into the satisfaction measure, the score would have been above the target mark, at 85 percent.

Despite the technical reason why the overall satisfaction score was not as high as in 2003-04, it is clear from the survey results that there is room for improvement. For this reason the IGA Office must continue its efforts to improve its services and effectiveness, and maintain the high operating standards it has set for itself.
